“We wanted a programme that would run throughout the year because there was a lot of stigma around mental wellness. People found it very hard to talk about challenges they face personally as well as at home. This is why we decided to work together with International SOS. They have a programme that starts from awareness, to mental resilience surveys, to mental wellness webinar series, a Workplace Employee Assist training that trains employees to identify people with stress, as well as the Employee Assistance Programme where employees could call for confidential emotional support advice from counsellors. What we wanted was someone who was completely objective so that our employees felt comfortable and felt safe to seek help. We also wanted to measure the outcome of this programme.”
